Evaluation should be ongoing.
At the outset, organizations should ensure that they have data from which to develop the strategic plan. This includes conducting a cultural audit to assess the current state. The initial evaluation should include an assessment of attitudes about DEI as measured by The Winters Group Inclusion Insights Survey™ or an internal tool that the organization may use, an analysis of HR data including hires, terminations, promotions, etc. We also recommend that the Intercultural Development Inventory® (IDI®) be administered to a cross-section of employees to assess cultural competence.

It is recommended that an organization develop a “dashboard’ to hold leadership accountable for goals and to monitor progress.
We recommend that the IDI® be re-administered at the conclusion of a structured, developmental learning plan to assess progress in cultural competence.

Conduct Comprehensive Cultural Audit

Assess Cultural Competence

The Intercultural Development Inventory® (IDI®) establishes a baseline for organizational cultural competence. Reassess after learning plan is complete.

Qualitative & Quantitative Opinion Research

Utilize current engagement data or collect our own to assess climate. E.g. Focus Groups, Stakeholder Interviews, Equity and Inclusion Insights Survey, etc.

Analyze Employee Demographics

Analyze internal data to identify barriers and trends.

Global D&I Benchmarks

The Global Diversity Inclusion Benchmark (GDIB) model is used to assess the current DEI programmatic state.

Assess Internal Processes, Programs, Practices

Analyze internal polices and procedures to assess their inclusiveness.
Assess Cultural Competence Using the Intercultural Development Inventory®

Goal: Assess the group’s capacity to effectively recognize, adapt, and bridge across differences.

- The Winters Group recommends administering the IDI® as the baseline survey in advance of any learning solutions.
- The IDI® is used to assess individual and organizational cross-cultural competence. Developed by Dr. Mitchell Hammer and Dr. Milton Bennett, the IDI® is a 50-item, theory-based online instrument that measures intercultural sensitivity as conceptualized in Bennett’s Developmental Model of Intercultural Sensitivity (DMIS). The DMIS is a framework for explaining the reactions of people to cultural differences. The underlying assumption of the model is that as one’s experience of cultural differences becomes more complex, one’s potential competence in intercultural interactions increases.
Dr. Bennett identified a set of fundamental cognitive structures (or “worldviews”) that act as orientations to cultural difference. The worldviews (see diagram) vary from more ethnocentric to more ethnorelative. According to the DMIS theory, more ethnorelative worldviews have more potential to generate the attitudes, knowledge, and behavior that constitute intercultural competence, and ultimately, inclusive behaviors.

The IDI® would be used to provide an additional layer of self-understanding for participants. The group aggregate profile would be shared as part of the initial learning experience. Following this session, participants will have the opportunity to review their individual results and Individual Development Plan with a Winters Group certified IDI® Administrator via phone.
The Winters Group uses leader interviews as a way to gain insights into how leadership thinks about organizational challenges and how they describe the role diversity and inclusion plays in supporting the achievement of organizational priorities.

Conduct Qualitative Research: Key Stakeholder Interviews
Conduct Qualitative Research:
Key Stakeholder Interviews

The key questions typically asked in the leader interviews are highlighted below. Additional questions to further probe survey results may be added.

1. What are your top three organizational challenges right now? What would you say are your top three organizational opportunities?
2. In your own words how do you define diversity? Inclusion? Do you see a difference? What is the difference?
3. In your own words how would you define equity? Is there a difference between equity and equality?
4. How does/can diversity enhance the organizational challenges and opportunities that you identified?
5. Based on your experiences with diversity, what aspects have you found the most challenging to navigate?
6. What changes in behavior do you expect from leaders and employees as a result of the diversity, equity, and inclusion initiative?
7. How should the organization’s leaders be held accountable for diversity, equity, and inclusion?
8. What recommendations do you have for the organization to enhance diversity, equity, and inclusion?
The Inclusion Insights Survey™ is a quantitative survey developed by The Winters Group to be administered to employees to assess attitudes and perceptions toward diversity and inclusion within the organization. Surveys are designed to be completed online. Results from the surveys may be used to inform questions for focus groups.

Generally accepted survey research protocol is used to design the questions and to establish survey sampling plans to ensure statistically valid results.

Conducted with various demographic groups, focus groups are used to better understand perceptions of diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Focus groups consist of homogenous groups who share some common characteristics that the researchers would like to better understand and should include 5-10% of the population. The number of actual focus groups is dependent on the population of different employee segments.
The key questions asked in focus groups are highlighted below:

1. What is it like to be an employee/student/parent at <organization>? What is the best thing about your experience? What do you like least?
2. What one word describes the climate at <organization>?
3. What do you think “diversity” ("equity," "inclusion") means at <organization>? Why is diversity (equity, inclusion) important to <organization>?
4. How is diversity valued in your day to day experience (e.g. with your interactions with managers and other employees)?
5. What is it like as a <social identity group> to be a part of the <organization> community? How are differences addressed?
6. How good a job is <organization> leadership doing in ensuring that it creates an inclusive environment for staff and stakeholders?
7. What recommendations do you have for <organization> to enhance diversity, equity and inclusion?
Examine Current Internal and External Systems & Structures

We recommend reviewing any pertinent data (e.g. prior assessment data, engagement survey results, etc.) as a first step.

We recommend conducting a thorough analysis of all internal information (e.g. hires, terminations, promotions, performance) broken down by key demographic variables such as race/ethnicity, gender, length of service, generations, function, and other relevant breakdowns that are available.

- Traditionalists are least likely to be terminated for disciplinary reasons and performance, but far more likely than other age groups to experience job eliminations/RIFs.
- Gen X’ers are terminated for performance issues about 7% more often than Baby Boomers, and Millennials are terminated for performance issues about 7% more than Gen X’ers.
- Baby Boomers experience job eliminations and RIFs over 1.5 times as often as Gen X’ers, and over 2.5 times more often than Millennials.

Global Diversity and Inclusion Benchmarks
All employees should see themselves in the strategy and be actively engaged in fostering diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Reevaluate DEI Council’s role.

Consider establishing an “ambassadors” group that works at the department level.

One of the roles of the Council should be to develop goals and actions to achieve/ensure an inclusive culture for all.

The council should develop/revise definitions that will guide the work.

The council should also explore how to engage external partners as applicable. (E.g. Other not-for-profits that you work with, establishing supplier diversity program.)
DEI Council Best Practices

- Led by senior leadership
- Develop “stretch” goals
- Link diversity goals to business goals
- Engaged and visible members
- Ongoing and transparent communication on Council work to entire Company
- Select members from every part of the organization and is limited to a specific number of people
- Select a leader or chairperson to guide the work of the group
- Develop and use formal communication mechanisms
- Schedule and attend regular meetings (usually monthly)
- Establish formal decision-making and conflict managements processes
- Receive support from the organization and leadership
- Advise on diversity-related issues, programs, and services throughout the organization
- Use a committee structure to get work done
- Monitor and hold leadership accountable for progress
Educate
Our DEI Learning Philosophy

Our philosophy is to meet people where they are and educate rather than train. Training efforts are typically designed as one-time events with a focus on tolerance and sensitivity — and perhaps a small amount of skill building. Education is developmental, ongoing, and focuses on competency-building through practice, reflection, and intentionality.
Our Learning Model

The Winters Group recommends a model for learning that is grounded in:

1.) A developmental approach, meeting employees where they are on their diversity and inclusion learning journey;

2.) Sequential, and ongoing learning sessions; and

3.) Fostering learning communities that promote individual reflection, collective responsibility, accountability, and reciprocal learning.
A Developmental Approach

The Winters Group is recommending a learning approach that accounts for the group’s level of understanding of diversity and inclusion concepts. The proposed learning experience includes a series of modules that start with foundational content and evolve into more advanced concepts of diversity and inclusion and skill building.

Sequential, Ongoing Learning and immersion experiences

The proposed learning experience consists of modules that build upon each other and should be taken sequentially. The Winters Group recommends time in between each session to allow for active, reflective learning.

Creating a Community of Learners

The Winters Group recommends a ‘cohort’ or ‘learning community’ model. Learning communities give participants an opportunity to form stronger relationships with each other (fostering collaboration) and engage more deeply with the integrated content of the tracks. The model is intended to enhance learning, but also foster greater community, collective responsibility, accountability, and reciprocal learning as the participants will evolve into a community of learners. The Winters Group also recommends leveraging our Cross-Cultural Learning Partners model.
To meet people where they are, we have to have some understanding of their current skill level to effectively recognize, appreciate, and leverage cultural differences and similarities in organizational settings.

The Intercultural Development Inventory® (IDI®) is a psychometric tool that measures individual and organizational cultural competence — the ability to effectively bridge across differences. The results of this measurement provide us with key insights as to “where people are” and thus the most appropriate learning experiences for a given skill level.

Without this knowledge, we have no baseline of readiness to design DEI content. It is like exposing someone to advanced algebra before they have taken introduction to algebra.
We Design Learning Based on The Intercultural Development Continuum (IDC)

One’s worldview orientation toward cultural differences is based on their level of experience. Those with little experience tend to deny or judge differences. Minimization, where about 68% of the people who take the tool fall, is a transitional stage from a mono-cultural to a more intercultural mindset. It tends to overestimate similarities. At acceptance/adaptation a person or group has a more complex understanding of difference and can recognize patterns of differences as normal and natural. At these stages, curiosity, empathy, and inclusive actions are possible.
Recommended Learning At Different IDC Stages

<tr>
<td>Adaptation</td>
<td>2.4</td>
<td>Continue to build on one's knowledge of cultural differences and to further develop skills for adapting to these differences, including engaging in “cultural mediation” and bridge building between cultural groups that may be experiencing problems</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Because most individuals and organizations fall at minimization on the IDC, our educational approach is focused on self- and ‘other-’ understanding, and bridging skills in an effort to move towards acceptance/adaptation. We propose a series of learning experiences that begin with foundational level understanding of diversity, equity, inclusion, and cultural competence, and evolve into deeper-dive experiences that increase one’s capacity to effectively lead and bridge across different dimensions of diversity.

Sustain and Build Upon Learning Outside of the Classroom Setting

Research has found that learning takes place when participants can engage in intentional reflection. As part of the learning experience, The Winters Group provides learners with reflection guides to accompany the learning experience that can be used to foster cross-cultural learning in between sessions.
The Winters Group offers a program called Cross Cultural Learning Partners™, which aims to foster reciprocal learning. We pair individuals who are different in some way (e.g., race, gender, sexual orientation, religion) and invite them to go on a guided journey of learning with each other. This includes short lessons with reflective questions and recommendations for experiences that they can share.

The Cross-Cultural Learning Partners™ program is grounded in the reciprocal nature of learning. It is specifically designed so that both parties are learning from each other, reducing the feeling that the learning experience is one-sided (like traditional ‘reverse mentoring’ programs).

Participants would be expected to engage with their learning partners in between sessions, as a means for reciprocal and reinforced learning. The Winters Group will develop prompts and activities for partners to engage in in between learning sessions. The partner model reinforces community and reflective learning.
Measure Progress

The IDI® helps us to design the most appropriate learning plan for the group. Reassessing the individual and group’s level of competence at the conclusion of the learning series is a measure of the effectiveness of the experience. The Winters Group has a number of examples of enhanced cultural competence as a result of a structured, intentional, developmental approach to learning as shown in the sample below.

The Inclusive Leader series
Inclusive Leadership Series: A Developmental Approach

The Winters Group offers a series of in-person educational experiences that will enhance inclusive leadership. The goal of the education is to enhance the capacity of leaders to effectively bridge across difference. The final content will be based on the outcome of the IDI® assessment. Recognizing that leaders have pressing schedules, these modules—typically delivered in ½ day or full day sessions—can be broken own into smaller 2-hour segments. These sessions can be spread out over the course of nine months to a year with reflection in between and re-administration of the IDI® at the conclusion. The learning plan can be delivered to coincide with already scheduled leadership gatherings. Alternatively, a 3-day intensive, immersive design is also available.
Module A: Inclusion Starts with “I”: Cultural Self Understanding and Unconscious Bias

- Provide an overview of diversity, inclusion, and equity and the business case
- Understand the Intercultural Development Continuum© on how we experience difference
- Increase self-awareness of one’s own culture and identity and how unconscious bias plays out

Module B: Who Are My Cultural Others?

- Discuss cultural patterns and different behavioral interpretations
- Explore culturally learned biases, values, and beliefs
- Understand the role of trust in effectively bridging across differences
- Explore how empathy can increase our capacity to understand difference

Cultural Self-Understanding Learning Experiences

These offerings should be be delivered in this order in 4- or 8-hour sessions or in a 3-day intensive Learning Lab environment where all topics would be covered.

1.) What is Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion, and Why Are They Business Imperatives? – Designed to provide an overview of key diversity, inclusion, and equity concepts using interactive techniques to engage the audience in understanding key definitions, concepts, and the connection to organization goals.

2.) Inclusion Starts With I – Explores the concepts of cultural competence, cultural identity, and cultural self-awareness, and provides tools to enhance understanding of how cultures differ. The Intercultural Development Inventory® is debriefed during this session.

3.) Cracking the Code of Unconscious Bias – Unconscious bias is a barrier to becoming more culturally competent. This learning experience explores the theory and science behind unconscious bias, incorporates experiential exercises, and provides techniques for managing our biases.

4.) Navigating Identity and Intersectionality – The guiding question of this session: How does identity and intersectionality influence normative culture? Which group norms are valued over others? How is one’s experience impacted by multiple intersecting identities?

These offerings should be delivered in this order in 4- or 8-hour sessions or in a 3-day intensive Learning Lab environment where all topics would be covered.

5.) Knowing My ‘Why’ — There is immense power in speaking from one’s own experiences. As an ally [or accomplice], one must be comfortable with listening while, also speaking out from their ‘why,’ in order to encourage other to find theirs. Why do you care about Diversity and Inclusion? Why do you care about equity? Why do you care about social justice? Why does it matter? In what way can your narrative liberate someone else?

6.) Privilege in Action: From Actor to Accomplice In the Workplace & Beyond — Regardless of who we are, where we come from, or how we identify, we all have some point of privilege, so we all need to know how to leverage it. This session will challenge participants to identify their sphere of influence and ways they can leverage their privilege to affect change and foster equity and inclusion.

7.) Taking off our Masks to Foster Authenticity and Empathy — An exploration into ‘covering’, code-switching, and minimization and its impact on workplace outcomes—retention, engagement, innovation. Participants will engage in experiential exercises that support them in modeling authenticity and its role in creating a culture where everyone can bring their whole self and develop the capacity for empathy.

1.) Inclusion Starts with “I” and Happens with Us — Building on Inclusion Starts with I, this course explores the dimensions of culture and how we can effectively bridge across our differences.

2.) Group Dynamics and Social Identity Theory — Participants will engage in a series of experiential activities that conceptualize the role of social identity and group dynamics in our day-to-day interactions.

3.) Gender Dynamics: Are Men and Women Really So Different? — Women and men often have different communication and leadership styles. Gender roles vary from country to country, region to region. How do these differences between men and women play out in the workplace? This session will explore research-based gender differences.

4.) #MeToo Imperfect Ally Workshop — How do men and women find common ground in today’s #MeToo environment? It is more than learning the legal “do’s and don’ts” to explore how to gain congruence in intent, meaning, and impact. Who have I been? Has my behavior always been aligned with my intent? How do we engage in meaningful dialogue to enhance understanding and mutual respect?

The order of these sessions is negotiable. However, Inclusion Starts with I and Happens with Us should be first. 4-8 hour sessions are recommended.

5.) Demystifying Generational Differences — Millennials and Gen Z are entering the global workforce in large numbers. Baby Boomers are working longer. For the first time in history there will be five generations in the workforce with different needs and expectations. This session will explore generational differences and how to more effectively manage them.

6.) Engaging White Men in Inclusion — Often white men feel left out of the diversity and inclusion conversation. They feel that diversity does not include them. White men have issues of inclusion just like any other group and are key to ensuring that everyone in the workplace can reach their full potential. This session will explore how to engage white men in constructive inclusive dialogue.

7.) RACE: Diversity’s Four-Letter Word — An exploration of race, racism, and colorism, the historical underpinnings of race in the US context, and why it is such a difficult topic to discuss. The overall objectives are to enhance understanding of past and current racial issues; how they impact workplace relationships, and practice effective approaches to dialogue.

8.) Exploring Whiteness and White Fragility — Whiteness as an identity has not been acknowledged widely until recently. This session will provide participants with a greater understanding of theories of whiteness and how to address concepts of dominance, supremacy, and fragility.
Bridging Skills Learning Experiences

The order of these sessions is negotiable. However, Inclusion Starts with I and Happens with Us should be first. 4-8 hour sessions are recommended or 3-day intensive intermediate learning only after self-understanding series is completed.

MAPPING THE INTERSECTION OF PSYCHOLOGICAL SAFETY, BELONGING, AND INCLUSION

A dive into psychosocial research that supports the role of psychological safety in fostering inclusion, and ultimately innovation.

ENGAGING IN BOLD, INCLUSIVE CONVERSATIONS®: AN INTRODUCTION

An introduction of concepts associated with engaging in Bold, Inclusive Conversations® (polarization, 'state of affairs,' workplace impact), and the model for Bold, Inclusive Conversations®. This course is also available as a series to take a deeper dive.

DECENTERING THE DOMINANT NARRATIVE

This session will address three key points: (1) the problem of “othering,” (2) the necessity of active listening, and (3) the choice of shifting our focus toward non-dominant narratives in the pursuit of equity.

CREATING EQUITABLE SYSTEMS

Equity begins by asking yourself: Are you getting the things you deserve, and are you willing to stand with and elevate the voices of those who are not? How do we use our influence to create equitable systems in our organizations?
Our Education Experiences:

VIRTUAL SESSIONS

The Winters Group Virtual Learning Labs are 90 minute live-facilitated, virtual sessions. The VLLs are synchronous learning utilizing interactive technology to engage participants from foundational to advanced content. Participants leave each session with skills that can be applied immediately.

| Affirming and Unpacking the #MeToo Movement – Part 1: Gender at the Intersection of Race and Class | The #MeToo Movement has been a powerful force in bringing dialogue about gender, harassment, and power to the forefront. The narratives and experiences shared by women of different backgrounds and within different industries serve as a timely reminder of the work that still needs to be done to foster an inclusive, authentic, and respectful workplace—and world. This first session discusses the intersections of gender, race, and class within the context of this new movement. How do these intersections manifest in the workplace and in our communities? Who is most vulnerable? How can we respond meaningfully across these intersections? |
| Affirming and Unpacking the #MeToo Movement – Part 2: Man to Man: Accountability, Backlash, and the Role of Men | The #MeToo Movement has been a powerful force in bringing dialogue about gender, harassment, and power to the forefront. The narratives and experiences shared by women of different backgrounds and within different industries serve as a timely reminder of the work that still needs to be done to foster an inclusive, authentic, and respectful workplace—and world. Join us for the second virtual learning lab in a three-part series as we discuss the role of men in in creating sustainable change from the #MeToo movement. How should men hold themselves and one another accountable? How can men engage in the movement authentically so as to preclude a cultural backlash and foster healing? After listening to the stories of women, what’s next? We will hear from men on their perspective on this movement and on how they can be a part of moving us towards greater justice around issues of sexual harassment. |

Mary-Frances Winters will lead us in a Bold, Inclusive Conversation™ around what's next in the #MeToo Movement. What do we do now, personally and in our organizations, once we've affirmed and unpacked the reality and complexity of the &quot;Me too&quot; stories around us? How do we remain steadfast in our commitment to include all voices at the table while seeking equitable solutions and spaces for healing and reconciling? How do we move forward with creating more empowering and authentic environments for everyone? The lab will be a panel discussion of D&amp;I Practitioners led by Mary-Frances Winters.</td>
